This quarterly newsletter provides community partners with updates on the staff, programs, and initiatives at UC Davis. It features articles on various topics such as diversity and inclusion, leadership development, and community engagement. The newsletter aims to foster a sense of community among UC Davis students, staff, and faculty alike. Dr. Rahim Reed, the Associate Executive Vice Chancellor for the Office of Community and Public Affairs, has helped establish the University of California, Davis (UC Davis) as a leader in diversity and inclusion. Reed considers the establishment of the Office of Community and Public Affairs (OCCR) to be one of his best professional accomplishments for that very reason. For fifteen consecutive years, the OCCR has selected a book that focuses on a controversial topic, which drives a year-long campus discussion. Dr. Reed has had a hand in establishing Sacramento Area Youth Speaks (SAYS), which empowers students to use their backgrounds and experiences to successfully navigate such a diverse society. SAYS has fostered an appreciation for the differences between community viewpoints and has helped students develop their own perspectives and listen to alternative viewpoints. Reed believes that networking with professionals and colleagues is crucial to the growth and success of UC Davis students. The ninth annual Summit College Day was held on May 19, 8 AM–8 PM, at the UC Davis ARC Pavilion. It brought together leaders from AT&T, Sacramento Area Youth Speaks (SAYS), and UC Davis to strike up dialogues with their peers and share their perspectives. The keynote speaker was an author who spoke about the importance of networking and collaboration in the workplace. Students in attendance explored the changing image of corporate America, focusing on African American, Asian American, and Pacific Islander, Latino, and Women's segments across the United States. The strategies and implementations impacting African American, Asian American, and Pacific Islander, Latino, and Women's segments have focused on academic achievement, contribution, and leadership. Now the director of AT&T, Bledsoe drives diversity segment strategies and implementation impacting African American, Asian American, and Pacific Islander, Latino, and Women's segments. While at UC Davis, Bledsoe received both the Chancellor's Award for Outstanding Service and the Chancellor's Award for Outstanding Student Achievement. He is passionate about access to education and is committed to welcoming community for UC Davis students, staff, and faculty alike. Dr. Reed is passionate about access to education and the importance of empowering students to be one of this best professional accomplishments for that very reason. This fosters an appreciation for the differences between community viewpoints, and it has helped students develop their own perspectives and listen to alternative viewpoints. Reed believes that networking with professionals and colleagues is crucial to the growth and success of UC Davis students. The ninth annual Summit College Day was held on May 19, 8 AM–8 PM, at the UC Davis ARC Pavilion. It brought together leaders from AT&T, Sacramento Area Youth Speaks (SAYS), and UC Davis to strike up dialogues with their peers and share their perspectives. The keynote speaker was an author who spoke about the importance of networking and collaboration in the workplace. Students in attendance explored the changing image of corporate America, focusing on African American, Asian American, and Pacific Islander, Latino, and Women's segments across the United States. The strategies and implementations impacting African American, Asian American, and Pacific Islander, Latino, and Women's segments have focused on academic achievement, contribution, and leadership. Now the director of AT&T, Bledsoe drives diversity segment strategies and implementation impacting African American, Asian American, and Pacific Islander, Latino, and Women's segments. While at UC Davis, Bledsoe received both the Chancellor's Award for Outstanding Service and the Chancellor's Award for Outstanding Student Achievement. He is passionate about access to education and is committed to welcoming community for UC Davis students, staff, and faculty alike. Dr. Reed is passionate about access to education and the importance of empowering students to